

Hello, I'm happy to introduce to you, Tyger-B, a muralist from USA. A professional artist who began doing big murals since his twelfth grade year, and since then, he's traveled around the world, adding an interesting glow via art.

As a youngster, Tyger-B has always enjoyed a pencil in either hand, drawing his favorite singers and cartoon animations; enjoying the belief of being a professional artist one day. Further studies and training happened in his hometown of Washington, D.C., gaining knowledge from two of his biggest visual inspirations: high school teacher, Mr. Usilton, and muralist, Byron G. Peck. Evolving from a pencil and charcoal artist to a painter in the tenth grade, and then an airbrush artist in the eleventh, he saw a storyboard play out as if he knew he would be that artist from his younger childhood dreams; moving onward to work on murals such as, "The Metro Center Mural," "Chamber of Commerce Mural," "George Washington Home Mural," and many others. He has displayed work throughout the United States, Canada, and Hong Kong, continuously striving to let his vision speak from his wide range of creativity.

Currently painting with acrylics, spray paint, and the airbrush, Tyger-B has a high passion for giving visions to the viewer; connecting his creative thoughts and abilities with realistic and playful choices. Humans, animals, or shape driven, Tyger-B is happy to create something worth wild for the world to see.

"The last mural I've created was in Memphis, Tennessee, and it was a piece based on the phrase "different, yet the same". A piece showcasing three different types of individuals that were all connected in the hope of living a happy life. As the it was being created, I was approached by several individuals which expressed high attraction to the unfinished piece and meaning. By the time it was finished, everyone that was near stated they love the piece, and they had a favorite at the same time. This led me to being a part of an ABC24 Memphis News interview. I was more happy to see my piece creating warm reactions than anything else. This was my point for creating it, and I'm grateful to be successful with my goal."
